

THE HONORABLE THOMAS S. ZILLY

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE WESTERN DISTRICT OF WASHINGTON AT SEATTLE

M.R. et al.,

Plaintiffs, vs.

SUSAN DREYFUS, et al.,

Defendants.

No. C10-2052Z

ORDER

THIS MATTER comes before the Court on plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction (docket no. 95). This action arises out of the State of Washington's decision to reduce Medicaid spending in 2011 in response to the current budget crisis. The individual named plaintiffs are disabled and elderly individuals who currently receive in-home personal care services<sup>1</sup> through Washington's Medicaid program,

---

<sup>1</sup> This case does not involve issues relating to the provision of medical care, i.e., care furnished by licensed medical practitioners; rather this case relates solely to in-home personal care services, which consist of non-medical assistance with activities of daily living, such as bathing, hygiene, and eating, and instrumental activities of daily living, such as shopping and meal preparation.

1 which is administrated by defendants Susan Dreyfus<sup>2</sup> and the Department of Social 2 and Health Services (“DSHS”). Plaintiffs<sup>3</sup> seek to enjoin DSHS from implementing 3 an across-the-board reduction in the number of personal care service hours 4 beneficiaries currently receive in their own homes in lieu of treatment in an institution 5 or nursing facility.<sup>4</sup>

7 Plaintiffs’ lawsuit is predicated on a fundamental misunderstanding of the 8 manner in which personal care service hours are distributed under Washington’s 9 Comprehensive Assessment and Reporting Evaluation (“CARE”) method. Plaintiffs 10 attempt in various ways to characterize the hours allotted under CARE as a minimum, 11 below which individuals cannot safely reside in their homes. CARE, however, 12

13
 14 <sup>2</sup> Defendant Dreyfus is the Secretary of the Washington State Department of Social and Health Services. Dreyfus Decl. at ¶ 2 (docket no. 124).

15 <sup>3</sup> The plaintiffs in this case consist of fourteen individuals, two nonprofit associations, and a 16 union that represents personal care service providers. Whether the organizational plaintiffs 17 have standing to bring the claims alleged in the amended complaint remains unclear. See RX 18 Pharmacies Plus, Inc. v. Weil, 883 F. Supp. 549, 553 (D. Colo. 1995) (holding that medical 19 providers only have standing under Medicaid provisions relating to reimbursement rates or 20 payment procedures). Moreover, the United States Supreme Court has granted certiorari on 21 the question of whether medical providers may maintain a cause of action to enforce 22 Medicaid’s reimbursement rate provision, 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(30)(A). Independent Living 23 Ctr. of S. Cal., Inc. v. Maxwell-Jolley, 590 F.3d 725 (9th Cir. 2009) cert. granted 78 U.S.L.W.
 24 3500 (U.S. Jan. 18, 2011) (09-958). This Court will address the standing issue once the 25 parties have fully briefed defendants’ pending motion to dismiss the plaintiff union for lack of 26 standing, (docket no. 135).

<sup>4</sup> The pending motion is not the plaintiffs’ first request for injunctive relief. This case was filed on December 21, 2010, and the issues currently before the Court were the subject of a motion for a temporary restraining order (“TRO”). The Court denied the plaintiffs’ request for a TRO, for the reasons set forth in its Order, on January 5, 2011. In the short time this lawsuit has been pending, the Court has become well acquainted with the parties and the issues raised by the case. The parties have filed more than 164 separate docket entries, and the Court has carefully reviewed all of the pleadings and heard over five hours of oral argument on two occasions concerning the issues now ripe for adjudication.

1 allocates hours in accordance with beneficiaries' relative needs and State budget 2 constraints, and not on the basis of what an individual actually needs to remain in a 3 non-institutional setting.
4

5 Since the denial of their motion for a temporary restraining order, plaintiffs 6 have had additional time and opportunities to further brief the issues, supplement the 7 record,<sup>5</sup> and present their arguments. Plaintiffs, however, have not improved their 8 showing of either likelihood of success on the merits or irreparable injury, and the 9 balancing of equities and public interest tips sharply in favor of the State. The Court 10 therefore DENIES plaintiffs' motion and the "extraordinary" interlocutory remedy 11 they desire. See Winter v. Natural Res. Def. Council, Inc., 129 S. Ct. 365, 376 (2008) 12 (observing that a preliminary injunction is "an extraordinary remedy never awarded as 13 of right").
14

15 BACKGROUND

16 17 Under the Medicaid Act, also known as Title XIX of the Social Security Act, 18 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396a-1396w, the federal government provides monetary assistance to 19 participating States so that they may furnish medical care and other services to 20

21 <sup>5</sup> After completion of oral argument on January 28, 2011, the Court advised the parties that 22 the motion for preliminary injunction was deemed submitted and directed the parties not to 23 file any additional motions or documents, except for relevant supplemental authorities, until 24 after the Court could review the enormous quantity of material submitted and render a 25 decision. Minute Entry (docket no. 164). Nonetheless, plaintiffs filed an offer of proof 26 requesting leave to amend their complaint to add certain individuals as plaintiffs. Offer of Proof (docket no. 165). The material submitted by plaintiffs in connection with this request are not timely for purposes of the Court's consideration of the present motion, and have not been considered, except as noted later in this Order. Likewise, the State's Opposition and the Engels Declaration filed today, docket nos. 169 and 170, are untimely.

1 qualified individuals. If a State elects to participate in Medicaid – which all fifty do – 2 it must operate its program in conformity with applicable federal laws. Alexander v.
3 Choate, 469 U.S. 287, 289 n.1 (1985). The federal government administers Medicaid 4 through the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (“CMS”). 42 C.F.R.
5 § 400.200. Washington’s Medicaid program is managed by DSHS. RCW 74.04.050.
6

7 Under the Medicaid program, each participating State must submit, and have 8 approved by CMS, a state plan for the provision of “medical assistance.” See 9 42 C.F.R. § 430.10. Only some categories of “medical assistance,” such as inpatient 10 and outpatient hospital care, are mandatory for participating States, while others, such 11 as in-home “personal care services,” are optional. See 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396d(a) & 12 1396a(a)(10)(A). Washington has elected to provide “personal care services,” which 13 are defined by the Medicaid Act as services that are 14

16 furnished to an individual who is not an inpatient or resident of a 17 hospital, nursing facility, intermediate care facility for the mentally 18 retarded, or institution for mental disease that are (A) authorized for the 19 individual by a physician or in accordance with a plan of treatment or 20 (at the option of the State) otherwise authorized for the individual in 21 accordance with a service plan approved by the State, (B) provided by an 22 individual who is qualified to provide such services and who is not a 23 member of the individual’s family, and (C) furnished in a home or other 24 location.

25 42 U.S.C. § 1396d(a)(24). DSHS has further divided personal care services into two 26 types of activities for which beneficiaries might require physical or verbal assistance, namely activities of daily living (“ADLs”) and instrumental activities of daily living (“IADLs”). WAC 388-106-0010. ADLs include basic personal tasks like bathing,

1 dressing, eating, and toilet use, while IADLs consist of functions performed around the 2 home or community, for example, shopping, meal preparation, and housekeeping. Id.

3 4 In administering Washington's long-term personal care services program, 5 DSHS uses a system known as CARE. WAC 388-106-0065. CARE begins with an 6 individualized assessment that assesses each beneficiary's functional capacity using 7 five criteria, namely (i) cognitive performance score; (ii) clinical complexity; 8 (iii) mood/behavior and behavior point score; (iv) ADL score; and (v) exceptional 9 care. WAC 388-106-0125. Based on the results of these examinations, the beneficiary 10 is placed into one of five acuity classification groups (A-E). Id. For example, if an 11 individual meets the criteria for clinical complexity, and has a cognitive performance 12 score less than four, the individual is placed into Group "C," regardless of the 13 individual's mood and behavior qualification or behavior points. WAC 388-106-14 0125(3). Thereafter, beneficiaries are further classified into subgroups depending 15 upon their ADL scores. Id. DSHS performs annual CARE reassessments for all 16 45,000 personal care service beneficiaries to ensure that everyone is properly 17 classified. WAC 388-106-0050(1) ("[DSHS] will assess you at least annually or more 18 often when there are significant changes in your ability to care for yourself.") 19 (emphasis added).

20 21 22 23 DSHS has assigned each acuity classification subgroup a maximum number of 24 base hours for personal care services. WAC 388-106-0125. Beneficiaries with the 25 most severe functional limitations are assigned to the group and subgroup with the 26 highest number of base hours. Id. By emergency rule, WAC 388-106-0125, Wash. St. Reg. 11-02-041 (Dec. 30, 2010), the State identified the base hours assigned to each subgroup as follows:

TABLE 1

Classification	2010 Base Monthly Hours	2011 Reduced Base Monthly Hours
E High	416	393
E Medium	346	327
D High	277	260
D Med-High	234	215
D Medium	185	168
D Low	138	120
C High	194	176
C Med-High	174	158
C Medium	132	115
C Low	87	73
B High	147	129
B Med-High	101	84
B Medium	82	69
B Low	47	39
A High	71	59
A Medium	56	47
A Low	26	22

Once a beneficiary is assigned to an acuity classification subgroup and allocated the base number of hours associated with that subgroup, those base hours may then be adjusted, either up or down, in accordance with several factors, including: (i) the availability of informal supports; (ii) whether there are multiple clients in the same household; and (iii) the characteristics of the living environment, for example, offsite laundry facilities or wood used as a sole source of heat. WAC 388-106-0130(2)-(4) (2010). The result of this computation is the “maximum number of hours

1 that can be used to develop [a] plan of care.” Emergency Rule WAC 388-106-2 0130(6), Wash. St. Reg. 10-22-066 (Oct. 29, 2010).

 4 If a change in a beneficiary’s medical condition increases his or her need for 5 personal care service hours, the beneficiary may request a reassessment. WAC 388-6 106-0140; 388-106-1303(6)(a). This request may occur at any time a beneficiary 7 concludes the allocated hours are not sufficient. Beneficiaries may also ask their case 8 managers to submit an exception to rule (“ETR”) request for additional hours.
 9 WAC 388-440-0001.<sup>6</sup> In 2010, out of the roughly 45,000 adult personal care service 10 beneficiaries, DSHS processed approximately 2,020 ETR requests. Rector Decl. at ¶ 9 11 (docket no. 125). DSHS approved 89% of the requests for additional hours. Id.
 12

13 In 2009, the State reduced the base hours for each acuity subgroup by an 14 average of four percent, with the largest percentage decreases applied to the 15 classifications associated with the least acuity. See Emergency Rule 388-106-0125, 16 Wash. St. Reg. 09-14-046 (July 1, 2009). In mid-2010, the State restored some of 17 these base hours, using the same principle in reverse, i.e., the categories with the 18 greatest acuity were placed as closely as possible to pre-existing levels, while other

21 <sup>6</sup> Of the individual named plaintiffs in this case, all have been informed about the ETR 22 process since this litigation commenced, and most have requested an ETR. At least one 23 plaintiff (M.J.B.) has received additional hours. Mot. at 12 n.13 (docket no. 95). DSHS 24 denied five of the ETR requests after the committee reviewing the requests determined that 25 those plaintiffs did not require any additional hours to preserve their health and safety.
 26 3d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 10 (docket no. 161). The committee determined that two of the other ETR requests identified changed medical conditions that required reassessments in CARE, and those individuals will ultimately receive more hours when their classifications change.
Id.

1 classifications did not regain as much ground. This methodology was consistent with 2 explicit legislative instructions:

3       The personal care services benefit shall be provided to the extent funding 4 is available according to the assessed level of functional disability. Any 5 reductions in services made necessary for funding reasons should be 6 accomplished in a manner that assures that priority for maintaining 7 services is given to persons with the greatest need as determined by the 8 assessment of functional disability.

RCW 74.09.520(4) (emphasis added).

9       At issue in this case is a new set of reductions, set in motion in September 2010, 10 when Washington Governor Christine Gregoire issued Executive Order 10-04, which 11 directed each State agency to reduce expenditures to compensate for a projected 12 budget shortfall in the 2011 fiscal period. Exs. 2-3 to Brenneke Decl. (docket no. 12).
 13 In response to the Governor's Executive Order, DSHS announced plans to reduce in-14 home personal care service base hours by an average of ten percent,<sup>7</sup> effective January 15 1, 2011. Id. at Ex. 4; see also Table 1, supra. The fourteen individual named 16 plaintiffs in this case will experience the following reductions:

22 <sup>7</sup> This figure reflects the difference in the average numbers of base hours across all acuity 23 categories for 2010 (161.2 hours) and 2011 (144.4 hours). When the decrease for each acuity 24 group is separately considered, the range of values is between 6.3% (Group E Medium) and 25 18.8% (Group B Low). The State has imposed a greater percentage reduction on individuals 26 with the least amount of need. The targeted reductions are consistent with the notion that the individuals currently receiving only a handful of personal care service hours per month are the most independent and therefore the least likely to require nursing home care.

<sup>8</sup> Prior to the State's reduction, DSHS granted an ETR to A.R. that authorized an additional 165 hours beyond the 157 allocated to A.R. through her CARE assessment. Exs. 2-4 to Frederick Decl. (docket no. 40). This adjustment via ETR has the same effect as assigning A.R. to acuity subgroup E Medium.

<sup>9</sup> The State has subsequently reduced A.B.'s hours to 146 because her previous CARE assessment had not properly reduced available hours to account for the fact that A.B. resides with three siblings who also receive personal care services. Ex. 1 to 4th Jane B. Decl. (docket no. 167-8); see also WAC 388-106-0130(3)(a). A.B. retains the right to appeal this reduction. Ex. 2 to 4th Jane B. Decl. (docket no. 167-9).

None of the individual named plaintiffs satisfies the criteria for “exceptional” care, a prerequisite to placement in the highest need acuity category, Group E. Most require only mild to moderate assistance with activities of daily living. DSHS sent written notifications to all beneficiaries of the planned service reductions on December 6, 2010. See Ex. 1 to Brenneke Decl. at 2-3 (docket no. 12).

PROCEDURAL HISTORY

This litigation ensued shortly after DSHS sent out the service reduction notices. On December 23, 2010, plaintiffs filed a motion for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction. Mot. (docket no. 11). After extensive briefing and oral argument on an expedited schedule, on December 30, 2010, the Court denied plaintiffs’ motion for a temporary restraining order. Minute Order (docket no. 73); Order (docket no. 76).

On January 6, 2011, plaintiffs appealed the Court’s order denying the temporary restraining order, thereby creating ambiguity as to the jurisdiction of both this Court, and the Ninth Circuit. Notice of Appeal (docket no. 78); see also Order at 3, M.R. v. Dreyfus, No. 11-35026 (9th Cir. Jan. 14, 2011) (Smith, N.R., J., dissenting). Because of the jurisdictional ambiguity, this Court stayed the case pending review by the Ninth Circuit, and struck, without prejudice, plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction. Minute Order (docket no. 80).

On January 10, 2011, plaintiffs filed an emergency motion with the Ninth Circuit, seeking an injunction pending the appeal. On January 14, 2011, the Ninth Circuit granted relief, but not in the form of an injunction pending appeal. Order, M.R. v. Dreyfus, No. 11-35026 (9th Cir. Jan. 14, 2011). Rather, the Ninth Circuit stayed the State's implementation of the emergency regulation pending a ruling by this Court on plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction. Id.

DISCUSSION

A. Standard for a Preliminary Injunction

In order to obtain preliminary injunctive relief, a plaintiff must demonstrate (1) a likelihood of success on the merits; (2) a likelihood of irreparable harm in the absence of preliminary relief; (3) a balance of equities tipping in favor of relief; and (4) a weighing of public interest that supports an injunction. Winter, 129 S. Ct. at 376; see also Alliance for the Wild Rockies v. Cottrell, 2011 WL 208360 (9th Cir. Jan. 25, 2011) (holding that the Ninth Circuit's "sliding scale" approach continues to be valid after Winter).<sup>11</sup> A preliminary injunction is "an extraordinary remedy never awarded as of right." Winter, 129 S. Ct. at 376.

<sup>11</sup> Under the sliding scale approach, "serious questions going to the merits' and a balance of hardships that tips sharply towards the plaintiff can support issuance of a preliminary injunction, so long as the plaintiff also shows that there is a likelihood of irreparable injury and that the injunction is in the public interest." Id. at *7. In the present case, the parties do not address whether the Court should apply the Ninth Circuit's sliding scale approach. Nonetheless, the Court concludes that application of the alternative standard would not lead to a different result.

1           B.     Irreparable Harm<sup>12</sup>

2           To show a likelihood of irreparable harm, plaintiffs argue they need only show 3 that the State’s proposed reduction “may deny them needed medical care.” See 4 Beltran v. Myers, 677 F.2d 1317, 1322 (9th Cir. 1982); see also Independent Living 5 Ctr. of S. Cal., Inc. v. Maxwell-Jolley, 572 F.3d 644, 658 (9th Cir. 2009) (hereinafter 6 Independent Living Ctr. I).<sup>13</sup> In the alternative, plaintiffs argue they need only show a 7 “serious risk” of eventual institutionalization to show a likelihood of irreparable harm.
 8 Fisher v. Okla. Health Care Auth., 335 F.3d 1175 (10th Cir. 2003).

9           Plaintiffs contend that they have satisfied the standards for irreparable harm 10 because (1) CARE is an individualized assessment of the minimum number of hours 11

 13 <sup>12</sup> In their brief, and at oral argument, plaintiffs contended that the Ninth Circuit has already 14 concluded that plaintiffs have shown irreparable harm, and consequently, this Court is bound 15 by that determination. But the Ninth Circuit did not analyze the substance of plaintiffs’ 16 request for injunctive relief, and declined to issue a temporary restraining order. Order, M.R.
 17 v. Dreyfus, No. 11-35026 (9th Cir. Jan. 14, 2011). Instead, the Ninth Circuit issued only a 18 stay pending this Court’s consideration of plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction. Id.
 19 Accordingly, the question of irreparable harm remains undecided for this Court’s 20 determination. Cf. Independent Living Ctr. of S. Cal., Inc. v. Shewry, 2008 WL 3891211 at *5 21 (C.D. Cal. 2008) (holding that Ninth Circuit’s order remanding case for a determination on 22 plaintiffs’ motion for a preliminary injunction was binding as to issue of irreparable harm 23 where Ninth Circuit issued an injunction pending further review by the district court).

24 <sup>13</sup> The standard articulated in Beltran and Independent Living Ctr. I is not applicable in this 25 case because personal care services are not included within Medicaid’s definition of “medical 26 care.” Compare 42 U.S.C. § 1396d(a)(6) (definition of medical care) with 42 U.S.C.
 § 1396d(a)(24) (definition of personal care services). For example, in Beltran, the State imposed a rule that completely eliminated eligibility to a class of individuals for Medicaid services. 677 F.2d at 1318 (denying eligibility for medical care to individuals who transferred assets in order to become eligible for assistance). Similarly, in Independent Living Ctr. I, the evidence demonstrated that medical providers would cease providing services to Medicaid beneficiaries if the State went forward with its proposed ten percent reduction in reimbursement rates. 572 F.3d at 658. In the present case, plaintiffs do not face a similar reduction or elimination of medical services.

beneficiaries actually require to remain safely in their homes, and therefore, any reduction of the hours assessed by CARE will necessarily deny the plaintiffs needed services and will pose a serious risk of institutionalization; or (2) even if CARE does not assess beneficiaries' minimum needs, the individual declarations of the named and unnamed plaintiffs demonstrate that, at least as to them, the budget reduction will deny them needed services and pose a serious risk of institutionalization. The Court concludes that plaintiffs have failed to submit evidence that the reduction will deny beneficiaries needed services, or that it will create a serious risk of institutionalization, and therefore, plaintiffs cannot show likelihood of irreparable harm under either standard.<sup>14</sup>

1. CARE Does Not Assess Beneficiaries' Actual Minimum Needs for Personal Care Services

Plaintiffs take the position that DSHS uses CARE to individually assess the minimum number of hours that each beneficiary actually requires, and that any cuts in base hours will necessarily provide beneficiaries with less assistance than they absolutely need to preserve health and safety. Plaintiffs contention that CARE

<sup>14</sup> In addition, to establish standing necessary to obtain injunctive relief, a plaintiff must show that the likely irreparable harm relates to harm that the plaintiff "has sustained or is immediately in danger of sustaining." City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 101-02 (1983). The threat of injury must be "real and immediate." Id. "Abstract injury is not enough." Id. The Supreme Court's heightened requirement for injury in cases involving injunctive relief is particularly relevant here, where plaintiffs seek an order from a federal court enjoining the State from implementing a State policy. Lyons, 461 U.S. at 112 (noting that respect for principles of federalism require heightened showing of potential harm for plaintiffs to obtain federal injunctive relief of official state action).

1 assesses the “minimum” hours each beneficiary needs is misplaced. CARE does not 2 assess beneficiaries’ minimum needs for personal care services.

3 4 Although the Court agrees that CARE involves an individualized assessment, 5 the number of base hours allotted to each of the seventeen acuity subgroups is not 6 linked to individual need.<sup>15</sup> Rather, the subgroups reflect the relative acuity of 7 individuals, with beneficiaries in classifications that receive more base hours having 8 more need for personal care services relative to those in categories associated with 9 lower numbers of base hours.<sup>16</sup> See Moss Decl. at ¶ 4 (docket no. 68) (“CARE does 10

11 <sup>15</sup> The base hours outlined in WAC 388-106-0125 are based on the time study performed prior 12 to the adoption of CARE. In that study, the department measured the amount of time 13 providers spent assisting beneficiaries with their personal care needs. Moss Decl. at ¶ 3 14 (docket no. 68). DSHS then correlated the time spent by providers with the clinical 15 characteristics of the beneficiaries involved in the study to determine the relative resource 16 usage of beneficiaries with similar characteristics. Id. The study did not, and indeed could 17 not, describe or predict the actual number of hours any specific beneficiary might need to perform specific tasks. Rector Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 125); Mahar Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 130). To the contrary, the study merely showed that individuals with certain clinical characteristics require more (or less) personal care service hours than individuals with different clinical characteristics.

18 <sup>16</sup> Construing CARE as assessing only relative need is consistent with the history of CARE, 19 which DSHS implemented in 2004 in response to the legislature’s direction to create a 20 uniform system for comprehensively assessing functional disability. RCW 74.39.005(2).
 21 Prior to 2004, the department used an assessment tool (“Legacy”) that was subjective and 22 unreliable. Moss Decl. at ¶ 5 (docket no. 68); Rector Decl. at ¶ 7 (docket no. 125). The 23 legislature directed DSHS to create a more uniform assessment tool based on objective 24 criteria that would allocate resources more consistently and thereby ensure that individuals 25 with similar clinical characteristics would be awarded a similar number of personal care 26 service hours. Leitch Decl. at ¶ 7 (docket no. 67); Mahar Decl. at ¶ 5 (docket no. 130) (“A primary goal for the redesign of the assessment tool was to develop classification levels that would ensure that clients who had the same clinical characteristics would fall within the same classification system and receive the same level of services.”). DSHS made the transition from Legacy to CARE in a “budget-neutral” manner, dividing the then-available resources between the various categories of recipients. See Leitch Decl. at ¶ 7 (docket no. 67). One of the negative consequences of a shift from a subjective assessment to an objective assessment is the loss of flexibility in dealing with individuals’ unique circumstances. Jenkins v. Dep’t of 1 not measure how many hours a person ‘needs,’ but instead determines what a person’s 2 share of available resources should be based upon the individual’s level of acuity 3 compared to other recipients.”<sup>17</sup>

5 Similarly, the subsequent evaluation of other factors, performed after the CARE 6 assessment assigns a beneficiary to an acuity classification subgroup, see WAC 388-

11 Soc. & Health Servs., 160 Wn.2d 287, 310, 157 P.3d 388 (2007) (Fairhurst, J., dissenting) 12 (“The price of uniformity is that fit may be imprecise in a particular individual’s 13 circumstances.”).

13 <sup>17</sup> The Court has carefully reviewed the contrary assertions in the declarations of Charles 14 Reed and Penny Black, filed by plaintiffs in support of their motion. Mr. Reed, however, has 15 no personal knowledge about DSHS’s development and implementation of CARE because he 16 retired from DSHS in 2000, before CARE was developed. Reed Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 18).
 17 In contrast, Ms. Black was employed by DSHS in 2004, when it transitioned to CARE. Black 18 Decl. at ¶ 4 (docket no. 19). In her current declaration, Ms. Black states that “[t]he CARE 19 assessment tool produces an accurate measure of essential need. . . . [It] is designed to, has 20 proven effective to, and is used by [DSHS] to measure the unmet needs that must minimally 21 be met in order to support a client in his or her home without compromising health or safety.”
 22 Id. at ¶ 28. While she was still employed by DSHS, however, Ms. Black provided a 23 declaration to the Washington State Court of Appeals in connection with an unrelated case.
 24 See Black Decl. (Apr. 11, 2005), attached to Work Decl. (docket no. 71). In Ms. Black’s 25 earlier declaration, she averred that, “[f]ollowing the assessment, eligible individuals are 26 classified into fourteen groups that reflect the intensity of care that is needed. This classification results in a baseline determination of the number of hours of in-home care [DSHS] may be able to fund.” Id. at ¶ 10 (emphasis added). Thus, Ms. Black’s current testimony, that CARE is an individualized determination of actual need, appears to be inconsistent with her testimony when she was employed by DSHS, which suggested that the base hour classification is not based on need, but rather on the number of “hours of in-home care that the Department may be able to fund.” In any event, on balance, the Court gives more weight to the testimony of current DSHS officials, and a plain reading of the Washington statute and regulations, than to the declarations of Mr. Reed and Ms. Black, and concludes that plaintiffs have not met their burden of producing evidence that CARE evaluates beneficiaries’ minimum needs for personal care services.

1 106-0130 (2010), does not take into consideration a beneficiary's actual individual 2 needs when arriving at a final number of authorized personal care service hours.<sup>18</sup>

3 4 Moreover, construing CARE as an individualized assessment of a beneficiary's 5 actual minimum needs cannot be squared with other facts. For example, the parties do 6 not dispute that the ETR process provides beneficiaries with a process for requesting, 7 through their case manager, an increase in the number of personal care service hours 8 over the amount authorized under CARE. See Moss Decl. at ¶ 9 (docket no. 68); 9 Rector Decl. at ¶ 9 (docket no. 125). If plaintiffs were correct in their contention that 10 CARE assesses each beneficiary's actual needs, the ETR process would be superfluous 11 because beneficiaries would never require more hours than the amount they have been 12 assessed by CARE.<sup>19</sup> 13 14

---

15 <sup>18</sup> For example, if a beneficiary's residence does not have on-site laundry facilities, the 16 beneficiary automatically receives an additional eight hours of personal care services, without 17 regard to whether the nearest laundry facilities are across the street or across town. See WAC 18 388-106-130(6) (2010) (noting that client is entitled to eight hours of additional personal care 19 services so long as laundry facilities are located offsite, i.e., where the client does not have 20 facilities in his or her own home, and as a consequence, the caregiver is not available to 21 perform other services while laundry is done). Similarly, CARE provides for an additional 22 eight hours of personal care services per month when a beneficiary uses wood as his or her 23 sole source of heat. Id. The additional eight hours per month amounts to sixteen minutes per 24 day in a typical month, more than enough in June, but likely insufficient in November.
25 Moreover, the Court notes that a beneficiary located in Spokane will almost certainly require 26 more assistance with stoking a fire through the winter than will a beneficiary located in more temperate Seattle. Nonetheless, the regulations would automatically award both such beneficiaries eight additional personal care service hours per month.

<sup>19</sup> Other structural components of CARE make it illogical to conclude that it determines beneficiaries' minimum needs. For example, plaintiffs do not dispute the State's assertion that CARE's acuity classification subgroups are comprised of individuals with a wide range of ADL limitations. Thus, for example, all individuals who meet the clinical complexity and cognitive performance requisites to warrant placement in Group C, and who also have an ADL score of between nine and seventeen, are placed into subgroup C-Medium. WAC 388-

1 Also relevant is the State's four percent reduction in personal care service hours 2 in 2009. Plaintiffs dismiss the 2009 reduction as incomparable to the present case 3 because it was smaller. But logic fundamentally dictates that, plaintiffs' contention, 4 that CARE determines minimum individual need is true, the 2009 reduction, 5 regardless of size, must have necessarily resulted in institutionalization or injury to 6 every single personal care service beneficiary in the State of Washington. Not only 7 have the plaintiffs failed to present any such evidence,<sup>20</sup> at oral argument, plaintiffs 8 conceded that the admittedly larger 2011 reduction will not lead to injury or 9 institutionalization for every beneficiary in Washington.
10
12 13

14 106-0125(3)(c). Consequently, two individuals that have the exact same clinical complexity 15 and cognitive performance are assigned to subgroup C-Medium, even if one has an ADL 16 score of nine (indicating only a moderate need for assistance with daily activities) while the 17 other has an ADL score of seventeen (indicating a serious need of assistance with daily 18 activities). Id.; see also Rector Decl. at ¶ 11 (docket no. 125) (stating that the 10,000 19 individuals currently classified in subgroup C-Medium range significantly in the amount of 20 assistance needed to perform ADLs and IADLS). Thus, despite having greater need for 21 services, a beneficiary with an ADL score of seventeen receives no more personal care service 22 base hours than others in the C-Medium subgroup.

23 <sup>20</sup> Indeed, the only evidence in the record is that the 2009 reduction did not result in any 24 negative consequences to personal care service beneficiaries. Moss Decl. at ¶ 8 (docket 25 no. 68) ("When personal care hours were reduced for all recipients effective July 1, 2009, the 26 negative consequences predicted by plaintiffs did not occur. Health and safety were not compromised, and people were not forced into nursing homes due to lack of personal care services."). The increases in base hours that took effect in 2010, replacing some of the hours that the State eliminated in the 2009 reductions, also contradict plaintiffs' position. Plaintiffs point to no assessment of individual needs that triggered the rise in base hours. Instead, the record suggests that the 2010 increases resulted merely from a budget surplus, negating any link between the numbers of base hours and what is "necessary in order to meet the individually-assessed needs of the client and to permit the client to remain safely at home."
Reed Decl. at ¶ 30 (docket no. 18).

1 Plaintiffs' concession is consistent with the statistical information submitted by 2 the State. In a review of a sample of the records related to Medicaid beneficiaries who 3 joined Washington's personal care services program after the reductions went into 4 effect on January 1, 2011, over 99%<sup>21</sup> of the sampled records reflected no complaint 5 concerning the adequacy of allotted hours. See 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 11 (docket 6 no. 132).

8 Plaintiffs argue that CARE assesses beneficiaries' minimum needs, 9 notwithstanding the structural and logical inconsistencies that result from that 10 conclusion. In support of their contention, plaintiffs cite to a number of documents in 11 which department officials suggest that CARE is a method of determining need. See 12 generally Exs. 3, 4 to 3d Brenneke Decl. (docket no. 120); Exs. 3-4 to 4th Brenneke 13 Decl. (docket no. 121); Exs. 3, 5 to Logan-von Wahlde Decl. (docket no. 117); Ex. 2 14 to Black Decl. (docket no. 19); Ex. 2 to 5th Brenneke Decl. (docket no. 144).

16 Plaintiffs' reliance on the various cited documentary and testimonial exhibits for the 17 proposition that CARE uses an individualized assessment to measure needs is 18 misleading. Although the cited documents do generally reference individualized 19 assessments and beneficiary needs, the documents do not specifically address the 20 purpose of the individualized assessment, or the need that is actually being measured.

22 DSHS's submission, and the very structure of CARE itself, demonstrate that CARE

24 <sup>21</sup> DSHS reviewed the records of 160 out of the 409 new and reactivated clients with care 25 plans completed after January 1, 2011. 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 11 (docket no. 132). Of that 26 total, only one indicated that the client felt that the CARE assessment did not allot an adequate number of personal care service hours. Id.

1 uses individual assessments to measure the relative needs of beneficiaries, i.e., how 2 much a beneficiary needs personal care service relative to beneficiaries with different 3 functional limitations. The assessment of relative needs permits the State to fairly 4 allocate a limited pool of resources, and to give preference to beneficiaries with the 5 highest functional limitations.<sup>22</sup>

7 Finally, the Washington Supreme Court's opinion in Jenkins v. Wash. Dep't of 8 Soc. & Health Servs., 160 Wn.2d 287, 157 P.3d 388 (2007), does not require a 9 contrary result. In Jenkins, the court addressed a provision in the CARE regulations 10 that automatically reduced a beneficiary's personal care service hours by fifteen 11 percent if the beneficiary lived with his or her caregiver (the "shared living rule"). Id.
 12 at 295. Three beneficiaries challenged the shared living rule, arguing that it violated 13 Medicaid's comparability requirement, 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(10)(B),<sup>23</sup> because 14 beneficiaries who lived with their caregiver did not receive the same number of 15 personal care service hours as beneficiaries who did not live with their caregiver, even 16 17

---

18 19 <sup>22</sup> Plaintiffs suggest that, if CARE does not determine minimum needs, it violates federal laws 20 that prohibit the provision of unnecessary medical services, as well as CMS directives that 21 require States to make determinations on coverage based on individualized needs 22 assessments. See 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(30)(A) (state plan must "provide such methods and 23 procedures . . . as may be necessary to safeguard against unnecessary utilization of such care 24 and services."); see also 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396a(a)(33)(A), (a)(37); 42 C.F.R. §§ 456.22-.23; 25 Ex. D to Hamburger Decl. (docket no. 151); Ex. 5 to 3d Brenneke Decl. (docket no. 120).
 26 Nonetheless, when pressed at oral argument, plaintiffs' counsel expressly declined to argue that CARE, and by extension Washington's entire personal care services program, is invalid under federal law because individual needs are not evaluated. As the plaintiffs have elected not to press the issue, the Court will not address it.

<sup>23</sup> The comparability provision mandates that the medical assistance a State provides for any individual "shall not be less in amount, duration, or scope than the medical assistance available to any other such individual." Id.

1 within the same acuity subgroup. The court agreed, holding that the shared living rule 2 violated Medicaid's comparability provision because some recipients were treated 3 differently from other recipients where each had the same level of need. Id. at 297 4 (citing Schott v. Olszewski, 401 F.3d 682, 688-89 (6th Cir. 2005)). In this case, 5 however, unlike in Jenkins, the State is treating individuals within the same acuity 6 group similarly. Jenkins is therefore inapposite, to the extent it involved disparate 7 treatment of similarly situated beneficiaries.
8

9 In addition, however, the Jenkins court also held that the shared living rule 10 violated Medicaid's comparability requirement because it reduced benefits based on 11 considerations other than recipients' actual needs for services. Jenkins, 160 Wn.2d at 12 298-300 ("Once a person is assessed to require and receive a certain number of care 13 hours, the assessment cannot be reduced absent a specific showing that fewer hours are 14 required."").
15

16 Plaintiffs argue that under the second, alternative reasoning articulated in 17 Jenkins, the State may not reduce benefits without assessing beneficiaries' needs. The 18 Court construes the alternative reasoning articulated in Jenkins as dicta because it was 19 unnecessary to the Court's holding. United States v. Henderson, 961 F.2d 880, 882 20 (9th Cir. 1992) (defining dicta as language that is unnecessary to the court's 21 holding).<sup>24</sup> To the extent that the language could be read otherwise, the Court declines 22

23 24
25 <sup>24</sup> In addition, the Jenkins opinion cites no authority for the broad proposition that Medicaid's 26 comparability provision requires the State to perform individualized needs assessments. See Jenkins, 160 Wn.2d at 298-300. This Court cannot adopt the reasoning in Jenkins when the plain language of Medicaid's comparability provision (which only requires States to provide 4 beyond cavil that [federal courts] are not bound by a state court’s interpretation of 5 federal law, regardless of whether [the court’s] jurisdiction is based on diversity of 6 citizenship or a federal question.”).

8 The fact that CARE does not determine each beneficiary’s individual minimum 9 need for personal care services is the primary reason why plaintiffs’ heavy reliance on 10 V.L. v. Wagner, 669 F. Supp.2d 1106 (N.D. Cal. 2009), is misplaced. In V.L., the court 11 addressed the State of California’s decision to eliminate or reduce eligibility for 12 personal care services based on beneficiaries’ scores in functional capacity tests. Id. at 13 1109-11. California used functional capacity testing to determine the relative needs of 14 individuals with different disabilities. Id. at 1112 (“FI scores were intended to be used 15 by social workers and county and state administrators ‘to compare the FI scores and FI 16 hours of clients on their caseload.’”). As with CARE, California’s functional capacity 17 testing was “not meant to be used as a tool to predict the number of hours an 21 equivalent medical assistance to similarly situated beneficiaries) does not appear to require 22 States to perform individualized needs assessments when the State has reduced benefits in the 23 same proportion to similarly situated individuals.

24 <sup>25</sup> Moreover, as the Court has previously noted, CARE is not an individualized assessment of 25 a beneficiaries’ actual needs. See Jenkins, 160 Wn.2d at 315 (Fairhurst, J., dissenting) (“The 26 CARE tool does not—cannot—allocate state-paid personal care services based on individuals’ actual need.”). Consequently, to require the State to perform an individualized assessment prior to reducing benefits would be nonsensical.

1 individual beneficiary needed.” Id. Unlike Washington’s method for allocating 2 personal care service hours, however, to be eligible for California’s personal care 3 services program, a state statute required social workers to make a determination that 4 each beneficiary “would not be able to remain safely in his/her home without [the 5 authorized personal care services].” Id. at 1111. Consequently, California’s decision 6 to reduce services based on the relative needs assessment would necessarily result in 7 harm, because the State had already determined that all of the program’s beneficiaries 8 required the authorized services to remain safely in their homes, independent of the 9 State’s functional capacity assessment. Id. at 1121-22. By contrast, in Washington, 10 personal care services are authorized exclusively based on relative need for services, 11 and Washington’s statutes do not require DSHS to make an individualized 12 determination that each beneficiary needs services to remain safely in his or her 13 home.<sup>26</sup>

22 <sup>26</sup> For similar reasons, the Court rejects plaintiffs’ reliance on Mayer v. Wing, 922 F. Supp.
23 902 (S.D.N.Y. 1996). In that case, Medicaid beneficiaries located in New York received 24 personal care services based on a physician’s determination of the number of hours the patient 25 actually needed to preserve the patient’s health and safety. Id. at 905 (“On the basis of the 26 various assessments, a medical review team determines the number of hours of care that an applicant will need.”). Washington, by contrast, has elected to provide personal care services under its state plan, rather than by physician authorization.

1                   2.     The State’s Budget Reduction Will Not Cause Harm to 2                   Specific Beneficiaries

3           In support of their motion for a preliminary injunction, plaintiffs filed 4 approximately eighty declarations<sup>27</sup> relating to fourteen named plaintiffs and twenty-5 one additional unnamed potential class members. The Court may not, however, 6 consider evidence of injury to non-parties because in the Ninth Circuit, “system-wide 7 injunctive relief is not available based on alleged injuries to unnamed members of a 8 proposed class.” Hodgers-Durkin v. de la Vina, 199 F.3d 1037, 1045 (9th Cir. 1999) 9 (en banc).<sup>28</sup> Thus, the Court will only address in detail, in this Order, the harm, or 10 threat of harm, alleged by the remaining twelve<sup>29</sup> named plaintiffs.
11

12           With respect to the individual named plaintiffs, plaintiffs’ counsel suggests that 13 the Court, in its previous Order denying plaintiffs’ request for a TRO, discounted or 14 trivialized the severity of the various plaintiffs’ medical conditions by treating their 15 16

18 _____ 19 <sup>27</sup> The Court reduced that number to seventy-nine when it granted defendants’ motion to 20 strike (docket no. 158), and struck the declaration of Jennifer Wujick (docket no. 119).
Minute Entry (docket no. 164).

21 <sup>28</sup> In an abundance of caution, however, the Court has reviewed the declarations filed on 22 behalf of the unnamed potential class members. Plaintiffs now seek to add these individuals 23 as plaintiffs and to amend the complaint. See Offer of Proof (docket no. 165). In the event the additional plaintiffs are joined, the Court can address their specific complaints at a later date.

24 <sup>29</sup> The number has been reduced from fourteen to twelve because two of the plaintiffs no 25 longer face a threat of harm. Plaintiff M.J.B. has received an ETR increasing her hours and 26 plaintiff H.C. passed away on January 15, 2011, for reasons unrelated to the issues presented in this case.

allegations of harm as merely speculation.<sup>30</sup> Mot. at 13 (docket no. 95). To the contrary, nothing in the Court's Order should be construed as minimizing the severe disabilities of any of the individual named plaintiffs, or the importance of the services provided through the State's programs. Nonetheless, although the Court has thoughtfully considered the allegations in each of the plaintiffs' declarations, in light of the prevailing standards for injunctive relief, the Court cannot conclude that plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of irreparable harm. In particular, the declarations relating to the individual named plaintiffs fail to show a threat of harm because they (1) ascribe the threat of institutionalization to plaintiffs' deteriorating medical conditions, unrelated to the provision of personal care service hours; (2) demonstrate ineffective management of currently allocated personal care service hours; or (3) identify non-personal care services as the cause of their predicted institutionalization.

a. Deteriorating Medical Conditions

With respect to nine of the named plaintiffs, M.R., S.J., A.B., An.B., M.B., J.B., J.H., D.W., and C.B., the record reflects that their medical conditions have deteriorated <sup>30</sup> Plaintiffs cite to Winter for the proposition that specific, predictive judgments are not speculative, and may be considered by the Court in determining a likelihood of irreparable harm. 129 S. Ct. at 378. In Winter, the Supreme Court addressed a proposed injunction that would require naval vessels engaged in military exercises to suspend use of certain types of sonar when vessels detected marine mammals within a specified distance. Id. at 371. The Court held that the testimony from military officers regarding the effect of the injunction, based on their actual experience with similar (although not identical) interruptions in the use of sonar during training exercises, was not speculation, but rather, a specific, predictive judgment. Id. at 380. Here, unlike in Winter, the plaintiffs do not support their formulaic recitation of "likely" harm (which the Court notes is repeated verbatim or nearly verbatim throughout the various declarations) with the type of specific evidence that would render the opinions specific, predictive judgments, rather than mere speculation.

1 since their last CARE assessment. See Maxon Decl. at ¶¶ 20, 29 (docket no. 26)
 2 (M.R.); 2d Maxon Decl. at ¶¶ 4-13, 18 (docket no. 102) (M.R.); S.J. Decl. at ¶ 20
 3 (docket no. 27); 2d Braddock Decl. at ¶ 3 (docket no. 100) (S.J.); C.B. Decl. at ¶ 23 4 (docket no. 29); 2d Hayes Decl. at ¶ 7 (docket no. 103) (J.H.); 2d Jane B. Decl. at ¶¶ 6, 6 (noting that, after latest assessment took place in September 2010, D.W. was 7 hospitalized for ten days in December 2010 for a heart attack); McIntosh Decl. at ¶ 7 8 (docket no. 32) (D.W.). Consequently, the Court is unable to determine whether the 9 alleged threat of institutionalization these particular plaintiffs face is the result of the 10 State's reduction in personal care service hours or the deterioration in their medical 11 conditions.<sup>31</sup>

15 <sup>31</sup> Even if the Court could conclude that the allegations in the declarations relating to these 16 nine individual plaintiffs raised questions of potential harm resulting from the planned 17 reductions, the State submitted evidence controverting the possibility of any harm. See 18 McNeill Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 131) (M.R.); Peterson Decl. (docket no. 127) (S.J.); Harper 19 Decl. (docket no. 128) (A.B., An.B., J.B., M.B.); Chan Decl. (docket no. 129) (J.H.). For 20 example, defendants submitted undisputed evidence that J.H. requested new living 21 arrangements because his live-in provider, Ms. Hayes, refused to allow him to contact family 22 members, and he no longer felt safe. Chan Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 129). Although 23 Ms. Hayes disputes the underlying facts, i.e., whether she refused to allow J.H. to contact 24 family members, plaintiffs submit no evidence controverting the fact that J.H. sent a request 25 to his case manager to change his living arrangements. Consequently, his placement in a 26 nursing facility is unrelated to the number of hours DSHS has allocated for his care in 2011, but rather is based on the availability of temporary care options following J.H.'s emergency removal from his living arrangements. Id. ¶ 9. Moreover, many of the allegations in plaintiffs' declarations appear to be purely speculative. For example, one of A.B.'s providers, Jeanine Starr, testifies that the reduction in services "could result in the need for [A.B.] to seek emergency room care and [A.B.] will likely be admitted to a nursing home at that point."
 Starr Decl. at ¶ 26 (docket no. 34) (emphasis added). The chain of events described in Ms. Starr's declaration is speculative at best, and does not demonstrate a likelihood of irreparable harm.

b. Inefficient Use of Currently Allocated Personal Care Service Hours

The record reflects that, in response to the State's budget cuts, plaintiffs K.S. and A.R. have reduced or eliminated their weekend care provider hours. K.S. Decl. at ¶ 15 (docket no. 36); Albert Decl. at ¶ 12 (docket no. 37) (K.S.); Frederick Decl. at ¶ 18 (docket no. 40) (A.R.). Prior to the reduction, K.S. received 133 personal care service hours, which she apportioned 93 hours to her weekday provider, and 40 hours to her weekend provider. K.S. Decl. at ¶¶ 14-15 (docket no. 36); Morrow Decl. at ¶ 5 (docket no. 38). Although DSHS only reduced K.S.'s hours by 18, she responded by releasing her weekend provider entirely. K.S. Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 36); Albert Decl. at ¶ 12 (docket no. 37). Now K.S. is receiving more hours during the week than she previously received (115 instead of 93), but has no coverage on the weekend, which she contends will result in harm. 3d K.S. Decl. at ¶ 7 (docket no. 145); 2d K.S. Decl. at ¶¶ 4, 6 (docket no. 97). The State responds that, rather than simply releasing her weekend provider, K.S. could have worked with her case manager to develop a schedule with shorter gaps between care. See 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶¶ 6-7 (docket no. 132). The Court concludes that a factual dispute exists as to whether the cause of K.S.'s lack of weekend services could be resolved by effective case management.

Similarly, the decision by A.R.'s guardian, Ms. Frederick, to eliminate care provider hours on Sundays appears to be an issue that might be addressed through case management. Specifically, Ms. Frederick decided to cut out one day of care on the weekend because it was "inconvenient for [the provider]" to work a partial shift on 1 Sunday. 2d Frederick Decl. at ¶ 5 (docket no. 113). The State agrees that the lack of 2 assistance on Sundays could create a problem for A.R.'s health or safety, particularly 3 given Ms. Frederick's inability to assist with A.R.'s care. 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 5 4 (docket no. 132). But the State notes that Frederick should not have simply acceded to 5 the provider's request to eliminate a partial Sunday shift for convenience reasons. Id.

6 The Court can only conclude that the declarations relating to A.R. do not suggest a 7 likelihood of irreparable injury because, until the State has had the opportunity to 8 correct the gap in care through case management, the Court cannot determine whether 9 the threat of harm is the result of the State's reduction, or the decision by A.R.'s 10 guardian to give preference to the provider's convenience over A.R.'s care needs.
11

12 These plaintiffs' apparent failure to contact their case managers about their 13 concerns is particularly noteworthy. See 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 3 (docket no. 132).
14 Rather than giving the State the opportunity to correct any gaps in care, these plaintiffs 15 appear to assume that the reduction will result in harm and that the only alternative to 16 reinstatement of their hours is institutionalization.
17

18 19 c. Non-Personal Care Services

20 Plaintiff T.M.'s provider, a family member who currently lives with T.M., is 21 concerned that as a result of the State's reduction in T.M.'s personal care service hours 22 from eight-three to sixty-nine, she will have no alternative but to seek other 23 employment outside the home. Hays Decl. at ¶¶ 4, 6 (docket no. 39). She believes 24 that if she is forced to take a position outside the home, T.M. faces a significant threat 25

1 of institutionalization because T.M. needs constant supervision and “is incapable of 2 staying safe while alone for more than a few minutes.” Id. at ¶ 6. Plaintiffs M.R., 3 A.B., M.B., and A.R. likewise argue that they face a threat of institutionalization 4 because the budget reduction will reduce available services for supervision, exercise, 5 and medication management. Maxon Decl. at ¶ 26 (docket no. 26) (M.R.); Starr Decl.
 6 at ¶ 26 (docket no. 34) (A.B.); Jane B. Decl. at ¶ 23 (docket no. 33) (A.B., M.B.); 7 Partridge Decl. at ¶¶ 5b, 28 (docket no. 35) (M.B.); Frederick Decl. at ¶ 18 (docket 8 no. 40) (A.R.). But personal care services do not include supervision, exercise, or 9 medication management. See WAC 388-106-0010 (defining personal care services as 10 “physical or verbal assistance with activities of daily living (ADL) and instrumental 11 activities of daily living (IADL) due to your functional limitations.”).<sup>32</sup> Plaintiffs 12 cannot show a likelihood of irreparable harm based on factors that are unrelated to the 13 reduction in personal care services.<sup>33</sup>

14 Plaintiffs have not shown that the budget reduction might deny any of the 15 individual named plaintiffs needed services, or that it poses a serious risk of 16

17 18 19 20 <sup>32</sup> Although regulations define ADLs as including assistance with certain locomotion, the 21 Court understands the regulations to refer to transit between living spaces or areas within 22 living spaces, not the type of exercise necessary to preserve a beneficiary’s health, which is 23 more akin to physical therapy. See WAC 388-106-0010; Harper Decl. at ¶ 10 (docket 24 no. 128) (noting that personal care services do not include assistance with exercise); see also 25 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 8 (docket no. 132) (noting that personal care services do not include 26 supervision).

 at 9) (T.M. – B Medium; M.R. – D Medium-High; A.B. – D Medium; M.B. – B High; and A.R. – B Medium-High) and could ask for either a reclassification to a higher subgroup, or an ETR, which could address any problems caused by service reductions.

1 institutionalization.<sup>34</sup> On balance, in reviewing the plaintiffs’ and the defendants’ 2 declarations, the Court cannot conclude that plaintiffs have shown by a preponderance 3 of the evidence that the allegations contained in plaintiffs’ declarations are more likely 4 true than the contrary allegations in the defendants’ declarations. Accordingly, the 5 Court cannot conclude that plaintiffs have shown the likelihood of irreparable injury 6 necessary to justify a preliminary injunction.
7

8 C. Likelihood of Success on the Merits

9 10 Although plaintiffs have failed to show a likelihood of irreparable harm, the 11 Court has also considered the likelihood of success on the merits of plaintiffs’ claims 12 that the decreases in personal care service hours violate the Due Process Clause of the 13 Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, the Americans with 14 Disabilities Act, and the Medicaid Act, and has concluded that plaintiffs have failed to 15 meet their burden on that prong of the preliminary injunction analysis as well.
16

17 ///

18 ///

---

19 20 <sup>34</sup> Plaintiffs argue that the Court need not rely on the individual plaintiffs’ showing of 21 potential harm because the department has conceded that the cuts will result in individuals 22 moving to nursing homes. See Ex. 4 to Brenneke Decl. (docket no. 12-8 at 7) (excerpt from 23 the State’s policy plan noting that “[i]n some cases, a safe in-home plan of care will not be 24 possible and clients may need to go to community residential or nursing facility settings.”).
25 At oral argument, defendants did concede that some beneficiaries might require more care 26 than the amount allocated after the reduction, and thus may end up moving into a nursing home at some future time. Defendants argue, however, that these issues can be resolved by effective case management, and use of the ETR process. The Court concludes that it cannot determine on the present record whether the claimed “serious risk” of institutionalization is the result of the hours reduction or plaintiffs’ failure to properly manage otherwise adequate resources.

1. Due Process Claim

Plaintiffs' Fourteenth Amendment due process claim, formerly addressed with little detail,<sup>35</sup> is now the centerpiece of their argument in favor of a preliminary injunction. Now, for the first time, in their brief filed on January 21, 2011 (docket no. 95), plaintiffs contend that the Due Process Clause entitles them to notice of (1) the right to request an ETR if the reduced hours are insufficient to meet their health and safety needs; (2) the right to a CARE reassessment; and (3) the availability of alternative Medicaid benefits, such as nursing homes. The Due Process Clause does not, however, require the State to provide notice of the specific information sought by the plaintiffs. Moreover, as previously noted in the Court's Order denying plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, Medicaid recipients are not entitled to notice and a hearing when the State implements a mass change that affects some or all recipients.

a. The State Had No Obligation to Give Notice of the ETR or ARE Reassessment Processes or the Alternatives to Community-Based Care

Plaintiffs argue that DSHS's service reduction notice should have identified the available alternatives to increase beneficiaries' personal care services hours, including the ETR and CARE reassessment processes, and also should have notified

<sup>35</sup> In the first round of briefing on plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order, plaintiffs devoted little more than three pages of discussion to their due process claim. Mot. at 23-25 (docket no. 11); Reply at 7-8 (docket no. 69). Moreover, although citing to the seminal United States Supreme Court cases on notice and hearing rights, Goldberg v. Kelly, 397 U.S. 254 (1970), and Matthews v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976), plaintiffs limited their due process analysis to whether the State had failed to comply with Medicaid's regulatory notice requirements when DSHS sent out the original reduction notification letters in December 2010.

beneficiaries of alternatives to community-based care. However, the hours awarded via an ETR are not an entitlement to which plaintiffs hold a legitimate property interest because, by definition, an ETR is an award of hours in excess of the amount the beneficiary is entitled to by rule. WAC 388-440-001(1)(b). Accordingly, plaintiffs have no right to notice or a hearing as to the availability of the ETR process. Bd. of Regents v. Roth, 408 U.S. 564, 577 (1972) (holding that a beneficiary of state aid has no right to notice or a hearing unless the beneficiary has a legitimate property interest in the entitlement). With respect to the right to a reassessment, which plaintiffs contend is critical in light of the evidence of changes in their informal supports, the State may modify an existing assessment without notice or an opportunity for a hearing when a beneficiary experiences a change in available informal supports. WAC 388-106-0050(2)(c). Accordingly, the State is under no obligation to provide notice of the right to a reassessment under the present circumstances. Finally, with respect to plaintiffs' contention that the State should have provided notice of care alternatives, plaintiffs already have notice. In order to receive community-based care, plaintiffs must sign a waiver acknowledging their right to institutional care. See 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 12 (docket no. 132).

b. The State Had No Obligation to Provide Notice and Hearing Rights for a Mass Change in Benefits

Although Medicaid regulations provide for notice and an opportunity to be heard in connection with certain State actions, see, e.g., 42 C.F.R. § 431.200, recipients are not entitled to a hearing if the sole issue is a state law requiring an

1 automatic change affecting some or all recipients. 42 C.F.R. § 431.220(b). The 2 limitation on the hearing requirement arises out of the practical consideration that, 3 absent some factual dispute about an individual's right to benefits, a hearing would 4 serve little, if any purpose. See Rosen v. Goetz, 410 F.3d 919, 926 (6th Cir. 2005); 5 Benton v. Rhodes, 586 F.2d 1, 3 (6th Cir. 1978) (“[M]atters of law and policy are not 6 subject to any hearing requirements under the applicable regulations, whether the 7 hearing be pre- or post-termination.”). Washington law is in accord, as both the statute 8 and regulations disclaim any right to a hearing for the purpose of challenging mass 9 changes to public benefits programs. RCW 74.08.080(1)(b) (“An applicant or 10 recipient has no right to an adjudicative proceeding when the sole basis for the 11 department's decision is a state or federal law that requires an assistance adjustment 12 for a class of recipients.”); WAC 388-418-0020(9) (noting that fair hearing rules do 13 not apply to a mass change in medical assistance benefits).

14 15 16
17 Plaintiffs appear to concede<sup>36</sup> that a mass change does not give rise to hearing 18 rights; only changes that create disputed facts give rise to hearing rights. See 19 Washington v. DeBeaugrine, 658 F. Supp. 2d 1332, 1335 (N.D. Fla. 2002) (“Both 20 sides have agreed further that there is no right to a hearing when there is no factual 21 issue attending a denial or reduction in services—that is, when there is no factual issue 22 to be heard.”). Nonetheless, plaintiffs contend that the State's reduction in this case 23 necessarily gives rise to factual questions as to whether individual beneficiaries will 24

25 <sup>36</sup> Mot. at 25 (docket no. 95) (noting that hearings must only be provided for challenges to 26 service reductions that are factually erroneous).

1 have sufficient personal care service hours to meet their needs. While an across-the-2 board reduction will always raise factual questions about the effect of the reduction on 3 specific individuals, it does not create factual questions as to the reduction itself. See, 4 e.g., Jeneski v. Myers, 163 Cal. App. 3d 18, 32, 209 Cal. Rptr. 178 (1984) (“The initial 5 cutback is indeed an across-the-board reduction in benefits mandated by state law and 6 is not an individual denial thereof . . . [and therefore] we do not believe that an 7 evidentiary hearing prior to termination was mandatory.”).<sup>37</sup> The wholesale nature of 8 the State’s budget reduction is fatal to plaintiffs’ due process claim because an across-9 the-board reduction is, by its very nature, unrelated to the specific facts of any 10 individual case, and therefore not a proper subject for an evidentiary hearing.<sup>38</sup>

13 Plaintiffs are not entitled to notice or hearing rights for an across-the-board 14 budget reduction, and as such, have failed to show a likelihood of success on the 15 merits of their due process claim.

20 <sup>37</sup> Plaintiffs retain the right to request a reassessment under CARE, or to ask their case 21 manager to request an ETR on their behalf. Both events provide for a right to grieve or appeal the decision. See WAC 388-106-1305; 388-440-0001(4).

22 <sup>38</sup> In the alternative, plaintiffs rely heavily on Budnicki v. Beal, 450 F. Supp. 546 (E.D. Pa.
 23 1978), for the proposition that even an across-the-board reduction of Medicaid benefits 24 requires a hearing. In Budnicki, the court held that the State could not reduce Medicaid 25 benefits with an across-the-board budget reduction without providing notice and an 26 opportunity for a hearing, pursuant to 45 C.F.R. § 205.10(a)(4). 450 F. Supp. at 551-52. The Sixth Circuit subsequently rejected the legal theory adopted in Budnicki. Benton, 586 F.2d at 3. Moreover, the regulation at issue in Budnicki is no longer applicable. See 42 C.F.R.
 § 431.220(b); Rosen, 410 F.3d 919, 926 (6th Cir. 2005).

2. Americans with Disabilities Act Claim

Plaintiffs fail to show a likelihood of success on their Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”) claim because (i) the State’s budget reduction does not leave individuals with no choice to submit to institutional care to obtain needed services, and therefore does not violate the ADA’s integration mandate; and (ii) it is likely that requiring the State to continue current funding levels for personal care services indefinitely would constitute a fundamental alteration in the State’s Medicaid program.

a. The Reduction to Personal Care Service Hours Does Leave Plaintiffs with No Alternative but to Submit to Institutional Care to Obtain Needed Services

The ADA precludes public entities from administering programs in ways that have the effect of segregating disabled individuals from the general community. Olmstead v. L.C. ex rel Zimring, 527 U.S. 581 (1999). Known as the “integration mandate,” and codified by regulation, the ADA requires that persons with disabilities receive services in the most integrated setting appropriate to their needs. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(d); Cota v. Maxwell-Jolly, 688 F. Supp. 2d 980, 994 (N.D. Cal. 2010) (citing Olmstead, 527 U.S. at 597). In order to comply with the integration mandate, States must implement reasonable modifications to otherwise discriminatory state policies, practices, or procedures, although the ADA does not require States to make modifications that “fundamentally alter” the nature of the service program or activity. 28 C.F.R. § 35.130(b)(7).<sup>39</sup>

<sup>39</sup> The fundamental alteration defense is an affirmative defense that the Court considers only if the plaintiff has met its burden in showing a likely violation of the ADA’s integration

1 To analyze whether a State's actions violate the ADA's integration mandate, 2 the Court must apply the following three-prong test: (1) whether the State's treatment 3 professionals have determined that community placement is appropriate; (2) whether 4 the affected persons consent to community placement; and (3) whether the placement 5 can be reasonably accommodated, "taking into account the resources available to the 6 State and the needs of others with . . . disabilities." Olmstead, 527 U.S. at 607 7 (emphasis added).<sup>40</sup>

8 9 Here, plaintiffs rely heavily on Fisher, 335 F.3d 1175, contending that the 10 State's budget reduction will violate the ADA's integration mandate by forcing 11 individuals to either forego needed personal care services or move to a nursing home.
 12 In Fisher, the State of Oklahoma imposed a limit on the number of prescriptions that 13 beneficiaries in community-based care programs could receive each month. Id. at 14 1178. The State did not impose a limit on the number of prescriptions that 15 beneficiaries living in nursing facilities could receive. Id. The plaintiffs, a group of 16 individuals receiving community-based care, sued under the ADA, arguing that 17 Oklahoma's new prescription limitations facially discriminated against beneficiaries 18 19 20

21 mandate. See Olmstead, 527 U.S. at 603-04. The Court may consider the viability of 22 affirmative defenses in addressing whether plaintiffs have shown a likelihood of success on 23 the merits. Perfect 10, Inc. v. Amazon.com, Inc., 508 F.3d 1146, 1158 (9th Cir. 2007) 24 ("Because the burdens at the preliminary injunction stage track the burdens at trial, once the 25 moving party has carried its burden of showing a likelihood of success on the merits, the 26 burden shifts to the non-moving party to show a likelihood that its affirmative defense will succeed.").

 Circuit has adopted it as controlling authority. See Townsend v. Quasim, 328 F.3d 511, 519 n.3 (9th Cir. 2003); Sanchez v. Johnson, 416 F.3d 1051, 1064 n.7 (9th Cir. 2005).

1 who had chosen community-based care, and would compel beneficiaries to either 2 move into nursing homes or forego needed medication. Id. at 1179. The Tenth Circuit 3 held that the facial discrimination violated the ADA's integration mandate because it 4 forced individuals to move into nursing homes to obtain needed medical care. Id. at 5 1182.

7 Fisher is distinguishable from the present case. In Fisher, the court addressed a 8 case of facial discrimination. The State provided certain services in nursing homes 9 that it did not provide to individuals living outside nursing homes. Id. at 1179; 10 compare Townsend, 328 F.3d at 517 (noting that the problem with the State program 11 was not whether the State provided the services, but where it provided the services).
12 The ADA prohibits States from providing services to beneficiaries living in 13 institutions while simultaneously limiting the availability of those same services to 14 beneficiaries who elect to live in a community-based setting. See Townsend, 328 at 15 517. In the present case, the record does not reflect that the State is providing services 16 to individuals in institutions that it has declined to provide to individuals living in 17 community-based settings. To the contrary, plaintiffs' evidence demonstrates that 18 individuals living in community-based settings currently receive more and better care 19 than individuals living in institutions. See Anderson-Webb Decl. at ¶ 31 ("I am 20 worried that in a nursing home, [J.P.'s] pressure sores will not improve because [J.P.] 21 will not get the attention [J.P.] needs to combat infection and move often enough.") 22 (docket no. 105); see also Jane B. Decl. at ¶ 24c (docket no. 33) (An.B); Davis Decl. at 23 24
26

¶ 33 (docket no. 30) (C.B.); Maxon Decl. at ¶ 30 (docket no. 26) (M.R.); Paulino Decl. at ¶ 26 (docket no. 45) (M.J.B.); Hays Decl. at ¶ 32 (docket no. 39) (T.M.); McIntosh Decl. at ¶ 21 (docket no. 32) (D.W.); Faatoafe Decl. at ¶ 26 (docket no. 56) (Z.J.); Lee Decl. at ¶ 30 (docket no. 147) (G.R.); Frost Decl. at ¶ 21 (docket no. 149) (J.W.).

Based on the record, therefore, the Court cannot conclude that the reduction discriminates against beneficiaries that have elected community-based care.

Consequently, unlike in Fisher, where the State facially discriminated against individuals in community-based settings by only making some medically necessary services available in an institutional setting, here, plaintiffs' evidence does not demonstrate that the reduction leaves them no choice but to submit to institutional care.<sup>41</sup>

Plaintiffs also argue that they are not required to show that the budget reduction leaves them no alternative but institutional care, relying heavily on Brantley v. Maxwell-Jolley, 656 F. Supp. 2d 1161 (N.D. Cal. 2009), for the proposition that they only need to demonstrate that the State's proposed action poses a serious risk of institutionalization. In Brantley, California attempted to impose a limit on Medicaid beneficiaries of three days of Adult Day Health ("ADH") services per week. Id. at 1167. Prior to the change, beneficiaries could have up to five days of ADH per week. Id. at 1164-65. Individuals in California's program obtained ADH services by <sup>41</sup> In Fisher, the plaintiffs presented evidence from their physicians that they required more than five prescriptions per month. Id. at 1179 ("[One plaintiff] takes approximately sixteen prescription medications . . . all of which are prescribed by her doctors."). Conversely here, plaintiffs' personal care services are not medically necessary to preserve the plaintiffs' health and safety.

1 participating in a rigorous medical screening evaluation over a three-day period. Id. at 2 1165. Following the lengthy assessment, performed by doctors, nurses, social 3 workers, and physical therapists, among others, the team of evaluators prepared a plan 4 of care, which included certifications that the number of days of ADH authorized by 5 the plan were medically necessary to preserve the health of the specific beneficiary.
6 Id. In reviewing the likelihood of success on the merits of the plaintiffs' claim that the 7 State's planned reduction violated the ADA's integration mandate, the court held that, 8 under Fisher, the plaintiffs need not show that the State's action would leave the 9 plaintiffs no choice but to go into an institution to obtain needed medical care. Id. at 10 1170. Instead, the Brantley court held that plaintiffs had met their burden because the 11 reduction posed a "serious risk" of institutionalization. Id. at 1171. In reaching its 12 decision, the court relied heavily on the physician-prepared care plans, which certified 13 that the authorized ADH benefits were medically necessary to preserve the health and 14 safety of individual beneficiaries and to prevent the need for institutionalization. Id. at 15 1172.

16 Brantley is inapposite. As a factual matter, each of the plaintiffs in Brantley 17 had physician-certified care plans indicating that ADH care was medically necessary 18 to preserve their health and safety, and to prevent the need for institutionalization.
19 See, e.g., id. ("Of the 100 participants, 44 of them have Medi-Cal approved [care 20 plans] certifying a need for four to five days per week of attendance to avoid 21 institutionalization."). Conversely, the hours assessed in CARE do not represent the 22 23 24 25 26

1 minimum number of hours necessary to prevent institutionalization, and plaintiffs 2 point to no analogous certification by a physician or other professional that says 3 otherwise.
4

5 Moreover, the court in Brantley erroneously relied upon Fisher for the 6 proposition that a plaintiff need only show a “serious risk” of institutionalization to 7 establish a violation of the integration mandate.<sup>42</sup> Id. at 1171. In Fisher, the Tenth 8 Circuit did not state that a beneficiary need only show a “serious risk” of 9 institutionalization to show a likelihood of success on the merits of an ADA 10 integration mandate claim. 335 F.3d at 1184. To the contrary, the court in Fisher held 11 that plaintiffs had shown a likelihood of success on the merits “[b]ecause the [State’s 12 action] does not allow the plaintiffs to receive services for which they are qualified 13 unless they agree to enter a nursing home.” Id. at 1182 (emphasis added). Thus, in 14 Fisher, the court required the plaintiffs to show that they had no choice but to enter 15 into a nursing home to obtain needed care. In Brantley, the court expressly rejected 16 the defendants’ claim that Fisher required plaintiffs to show that the State’s action left 17 18 19

---

20 <sup>42</sup> The Civil Rights Division of the United States Department of Justice (“DOJ”) filed an 21 amicus brief in support of plaintiffs’ claims, arguing that under ADA regulations, parties need 22 only show a threat of eventual institutionalization to establish a violation of the integration 23 mandate, rather than a threat of immediate institutionalization. Amicus Br. (docket no. 139).
24 DOJ argues that, as the agency charged with enforcement of the ADA, the Court must give 25 deference to its interpretation of ADA regulations. Id. But DOJ has not promulgated 26 regulations interpreting the ADA’s integration mandate to require only a showing of eventual institutionalization to show a violation of the integration mandate. To the contrary, DOJ has merely taken a position in this litigation that the Court should adopt its interpretation of the regulation. The Court owes no deference to a self-serving agency interpretation taken solely in the context of ongoing litigation. Mid-America Care Found. v. NLRB, 148 F.3d 638, 642 (6th Cir. 1998); Alaniz v. Office of Personnel Mgmt., 728 F.2d 1460 (Fed. Cir. 1984).

1 them no choice but to enter a nursing home, holding instead that Fisher only required 2 plaintiffs to show a “serious risk” of institutionalization to demonstrate a likelihood of 3 success on their ADA claim. Brantley, 656 F. Supp. 2d at 1170 (“Defendants fail to 4 cite any relevant authority imposing a ‘no choice’ requirement.”). The Tenth Circuit 5 only discusses the “serious risk” of institutionalization in the context of its analysis of 6 likelihood of irreparable harm. 335 F.3d at 1184. Accordingly, the Brantley court 7 erred in concluding that a “serious risk” of institutionalization is sufficient to show a 8 likelihood of success on the merits of an ADA integration mandate claim. The proper 9 standard to show a violation of the integration mandate, set forth in Fisher, requires 10 plaintiffs to show that the State’s action leaves them no choice but to submit to 11 institutional care to obtain services for which they are otherwise qualified.

14                   b.     Any Order Requiring the State to Continue Funding 15                             Personal Care Services at Pre-2011 Levels Likely 16                             Constitutes a Fundamental Alteration of the State’s Medicaid Program

17           Even if plaintiffs could establish a likelihood of success on their claim that the 18 State’s budget reduction violated the ADA’s integration mandate, the Court concludes 19 that the State has met its burden in presenting evidence that the return to pre-2011 20 funding levels would likely constitute a fundamental alteration of the State’s Medicaid 21 program. Courts have construed the third element of the Olmstead test as 22 incorporating the fundamental alteration defense. See, e.g., Arc of Wash. State, Inc. v.
 23 Braddock, 427 F.3d 615, 618 (9th Cir. 2005) (“The Supreme Court has instructed 24 courts to be sympathetic to fundamental alteration defenses, and to give States 25

1 ‘leeway’ in administering services for the disabled.”); see also Olmstead, 527 U.S. at 2 604 (“Sensibly construed, the fundamental alteration component of the reasonable-3 modifications regulation would allow the State to show that, in the allocation of 4 available resources, immediate relief for the plaintiffs would be inequitable, given the 5 responsibility the State has undertaken for the care and treatment of a large and 6 diverse population of persons with mental disabilities.”) (emphasis added). The State 7 can satisfy its burden to show that the requested modification is a “fundamental 8 alteration” by submitting evidence demonstrating that the modification would in fact 9 compel cutbacks in services to other Medicaid recipients. See, e.g., Townsend, 328 10 F.3d at 520 (noting that the State could be entitled to the benefit of the fundamental 11 alteration defense if it could show that the added financial burden would result in 12 cutbacks to other Medicaid programs); see also Fisher 335 F.3d at 1183 (rejecting 13 State’s argument that the need to fill a budget deficit was sufficient to constitute a 14 “fundamental alteration” of the State’s Medicaid program, but noting that a budget 15 deficit might be sufficient if the State submitted evidence demonstrating that 16 preserving the beneficiaries’ right to unlimited prescriptions would in fact compel 17 cutbacks in services to other Medicaid recipients).

18 19 Here, the State has submitted unrefuted evidence that it will need to make 20 drastic cuts in other state programs if this Court grants plaintiffs’ requested 21 preliminary injunction. See, e.g., Drefus Decl. at ¶ 6 (docket no. 124) (describing 22 alternative programs that will be reduced or eliminated if the Court enjoins the State 23 24 25 26

1 from reducing funding for the personal care services program); Ex. 3 to 2d Work Decl.
2 (docket no. 134) (describing other cuts DSHS will likely be required to make to social 3 services beginning in March 2011).

5 Plaintiffs have failed to show a likelihood of success on their claim that the 6 State's reduction of hours constitutes a violation of the ADA's integration mandate, 7 and even if they could show likely success, their proposed modification would likely 8 constitute a fundamental alteration of the State's Medicaid program. So long as a 9 State is genuinely and effectively in the process of deinstitutionalizing disabled 10 persons with an even hand, courts should not interfere. Arc of Wash. State, Inc., 427 11 F.3d at 620. Based on the record in this case, the Court finds that Washington has a 12 genuine and effective commitment to deinstitutionalization. Over the last decade, the 13 number of institutionalized disabled individuals in Washington has steadily declined.
14 Leitch Decl. at ¶ 2 (docket no. 67); Moss Decl. at ¶ 2 (docket no. 68). The number of 15 institutionalized disabled individuals continued its decades-long decline even after the 16 State reduced the budget for personal care services by four percent in 2009, and 17 despite the fact that the number of individuals who are eligible for institutional care 18 has steadily increased. Lindeblad Decl. at ¶¶ 6, 11 (docket no. 159) (noting that the 19 number of individuals eligible for institutional care increased from 39,506 in FY 2008 20 to 44,709 in FY 2010, and is forecasted to be approximately 51,693 by FY 2013).
21 Indeed, despite the 2009 reduction, the State transitioned approximately 4,400 22 individuals from institutional care to in-home or residential care in 2010. Id. at ¶ 6.
23
25 26

1 Given that the State has a system in place that has been proven to work, and indeed has 2 been repeatedly referred to by plaintiffs in this litigation as the “gem” of the fifty 3 States, the Court sees no basis for meddling with matters that are more appropriately 4 left to state legislators and administrators.
5

6 3. Medicaid Act Claims

7 Plaintiffs’ Medicaid Act claims, tabbed as the primary focus of this lawsuit at 8 the temporary restraining order stage of the case, have now been relegated to an 9 afterthought. Plaintiffs raise no new arguments for the Court’s consideration, instead 10 restating the points that the Court rejected when it denied plaintiffs’ motion for a 11 temporary restraining order. Accordingly, the Court will only briefly address the 12 merits of plaintiffs’ Medicaid Act claims.
13

14 a. Reasonable Standards Requirement

15 Medicaid requires that state plans have “reasonable standards . . . for 16 determining . . . the extent of medical assistance under the plan which . . . are 17 consistent with the objectives of [Medicaid].” 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(17). Plaintiffs 18 contend that DSHS’s reduction in personal care services is unreasonable because it 19 will decrease available services below the level necessary for beneficiaries to remain 20 safely in their homes. Plaintiffs have not shown that CARE determines the actual 21 minimum personal care service needs of individual beneficiaries, and they have not 22 established that the hours awarded after the State’s proposed downward adjustment 23 will fail to meet any individual plaintiffs’ specific needs. Consequently, plaintiffs 24 25 26

1 have not shown a likelihood of success on the merits of their reasonable standards 2 claim.<sup>43</sup>

3 4 b. Sufficiency Requirement

5 Medicaid's sufficiency provision requires that "[e]ach service must be 6 sufficient in amount, duration, and scope to reasonably achieve its purpose." 7 42 C.F.R. § 440.230(b). Service levels are sufficient if they meet the purposes of the 8 specific program. Curtis v. Taylor, 625 F.2d 645, 651 (5th Cir. 1980). Whether the 9 available personal care service hours after the reduction are sufficient to meet the 10 program's purposes must be examined in the context of the substantial discretion 11 States are afforded to choose the proper mix of amount, scope, and duration limitations 12 on Medicaid coverage. See Alexander, 469 U.S. at 303 (holding that Medicaid merely 13 14 15 16

---

17 <sup>43</sup> Plaintiffs cite several cases for the proposition that a reduction in Medicaid services without 18 consideration of the needs of individual beneficiaries is unreasonable. See Lankford v.
 19 Sherman, 451 F.3d 496 (8th Cir. 2006); V.L., 669 F. Supp. 2d 1106. But those cases involved 20 the complete elimination of programs, or the wholesale elimination of categories of eligibility.
 21 For example, in Lankford, the State of Missouri passed a law that eliminated optional 22 coverage for Medicaid recipients for durable medical equipment ("DME"). 451 F.3d at 501.
 23 The Missouri agency administering Medicaid then passed emergency regulations that 24 reinstated the right of recipients to some, but not all, of the medically necessary DME devices.
 25 Id. The Eighth Circuit held that the reinstatement of eligibility as to only a portion of the 26 DME devices was unreasonable because the regulation did not provide any mechanism for individuals to obtain non-covered DME devices. Id. at 513. Similarly, in V.L., the State of California passed a law that eliminated some beneficiaries' eligibility for all covered services.
 669 F. Supp. 2d at 1117. The law also eliminated categories of eligibility for other recipients.
Id. Conversely, here, none of the beneficiaries are losing eligibility for in-home personal care services or categories of care. DSHS is merely exercising its broad discretion to modify the extent of medical assistance in light of scarce resources. Beal v. Doe, 432 U.S. 438, 444 (1977).

1 provides a package of services that has the general aim of assuring that individuals will 2 receive necessary medical care, it does not assure “adequate health care.”<sup>44</sup>

4 In this case, DSHS has continued to provide a substantial number of in-home 5 personal care service hours following implementation of the 2011 reduction. Indeed, 6 the record reflects that over 99% of the beneficiaries sampled that have joined the 7 program since January 1, 2011, have not questioned the adequacy of personal care 8 service hours allocated pursuant to CARE. 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 11 (docket no. 132).
9 In light of the broad discretion granted to states to craft a manageable Medicaid plan, 10 plaintiffs have not shown that the 2011 reduction fails to satisfy the purpose of 11 Washington’s program, namely providing disabled individuals with assistance with 12 their ADLs and IADLs. WAC 388-106-0010.
13

14 c. Comparability Requirement

15 Medicaid’s comparability provision requires states to provide “comparable 16 services when individuals have comparable needs.” 42 U.S.C. § 1396a(a)(10)(B).
17 Plaintiffs do not contend, however, that the 2011 reduction treats similarly situated 18 beneficiaries differently. See, e.g., Jenkins, 160 Wn.2d at 297 (“[C]ourts have 19 consistently . . . found that states violated the comparability requirement where some 20 recipients are treated differently from other recipients where each has the same level of 21 need.”). At oral argument, counsel for plaintiffs conceded that all similarly situated 22 23

---

24 <sup>44</sup> Plaintiffs contend that any reliance on Alexander is misplaced because that case addressed 25 violations of the Rehabilitation Act. Mot. at 36 n.58 (docket no. 95). The Supreme Court’s 26 discussion about the purpose of the Medicaid Act in Alexander is nonetheless guidance in this Court’s consideration of whether the State’s 2011 budget will provide sufficient resources to meet the program’s purposes.

beneficiaries (i.e., beneficiaries in the same acuity subgroup) are subject to the same reduction in hours. Moreover, CMS regulations interpreting the comparability provision appear to contemplate that state agencies “may place appropriate limits on a service.” 42 C.F.R. § 440.230(d).<sup>45</sup> Accordingly, plaintiffs have failed to show a likelihood of success on the merits of their comparability claim.

d. Free Choice Requirement

Medicaid’s free choice provision requires that beneficiaries be “informed of the feasible alternatives” to institutional care, and have individual choice. 42 U.S.C. §§ 1396n(c)(2)(C), 1396n(d)(2)(C). Here, plaintiffs apparently contend that the State did not inform them of feasible alternatives when it distributed notices of the planned reductions in services in December 2010. But plaintiffs in this case are necessarily already aware of alternatives to institutional care. By virtue of their receipt of personal care service, either under Washington’s state plan or through one of its Medicaid waiver programs, the plaintiffs are already participating in Washington’s alternative to <sup>45</sup> Specifically, the regulations provide that “[t]he agency may place appropriate limits on a service based on such criteria as medical necessity or on utilization control procedures.” 42 C.F.R. § 440.230(d) (emphasis added). The Court reads the regulation’s use of the words “such criteria as” to mean that “medical necessity” and “utilization control procedures” are examples, not the only grounds upon which an agency may place limitations on a service. See, e.g., Health Care Financing Administration, Proposed Rules, Payment for Covered Outpatient Drugs under Drug Rebate Agreements with Manufacturers, 60 Fed. Reg. 48442, 48458 (1995) (noting that prior to enactment of an amendment to Title XIX in 1990 applicable only to prescription drugs, “[s]tates could establish amount, duration, and scope restrictions on Medicaid services, including prescription drugs . . . based on such criteria as medical necessity and utilization control, or [these restrictions] could be based on other factors so long as the amount of the services provided was sufficient to ‘reasonably achieve its purpose’”) (emphasis added).

---

1 institutional care. At oral argument, plaintiffs posited an entirely novel legal theory, 2 contending that whenever the State alters its community-based services, the State is 3 obligated to inform beneficiaries of their right to receive institutional care. Plaintiffs 4 cite no authority to support this proposition, which is directly contrary to the plain 5 language of the free choice provision.<sup>46</sup> See, e.g., 42 U.S.C. § 1396n(d)(2)(C) (stating 7 that individuals must be informed of the “feasible alternatives to the provision of 8 skilled nursing facility or intermediate care facility services.”) (emphasis added); see 9 also 42 U.S.C. § 1396n(c)(2)(C). The Court rejects any such requirement, and 10 concludes that plaintiffs have failed to demonstrate a likelihood of success on the 11 merits for their freedom of choice claim.<sup>47</sup>

13 e. Federal Approval Requirement

14 Finally, plaintiffs contend that the 2011 reduction is a material change in the 15 State’s Medicaid plan that requires federal approval. See 42 C.F.R. § 430.12(c)(1)(ii).
 16 As previously noted by this Court, and also by a different court in this district in 17 connection with the 2009 budget reduction, federal approval is not required because 18 Washington’s Medicaid plan does not describe a minimum number of personal care 19

21 <sup>46</sup> The Court also notes that plaintiffs received notice of their right to receive alternative care 22 when they originally elected to receive community-based care in lieu of institutional care.
 23 See, e.g., 2d McNeill Decl. at ¶ 12 (docket no. 132).

24 <sup>47</sup> The Court also rejects plaintiffs’ contention that the reduction in services will place 25 beneficiaries in the untenable position of either choosing to go without needed care or 26 submitting to unwarranted institutionalization. See, e.g., Ball v. Rodgers, 492 F.3d 1094, 1107 (9th Cir. 2007). As previously noted, plaintiffs have failed to meet their burden to show a likelihood of irreparable harm, and as such, cannot show that the reduced services will fail to satisfy beneficiaries’ health and safety needs.

1 service hours or, for that matter, a method of calculating personal care service hours.
2 Order at 20 (docket no. 76); see also Freeman v. Wash. Dep't of Soc. & Health Servs., 3 2010 WL 3720285 (W.D. Wash.). As such, the planned reductions do not amend the 4 state plan or trigger the need for federal approval. See Freeman, 2010 WL 3720285 at 5 *9 (“Because [Washington’s] state Medicaid plan does not indicate the number of 6 hours or the methodology to be used in determining the number of hours to be 7 provided to recipients, any modification to that methodology need not be reflected in 8 an amendment to the state plan.”). Accordingly, plaintiffs have failed to show a 9 likelihood of success on the merits on this claim.
10

12 D. Balance of the Equities and the Public Interest

13 The Court is tasked with balancing plaintiffs’ claims of potential harm with the 14 State’s inability to fund the personal care services program. Plaintiffs argue that when 15 balancing the medical needs of the indigent against a State’s budgetary crisis, the 16 Ninth Circuit has come down firmly on the side of preserving medical benefits.
17 Independent Living Ctr. I, 572 F.3d at 659 (“State budgetary concerns cannot . . . ‘be 18 the conclusive factor in decisions regarding Medicaid.’”). However, these reductions 19 do not involve medical care. Rather, this case deals with personal care services; 20 assistance with activities of daily living performed by caregivers who have no 21 particular medical training.
22
23

24 In addition, the record includes evidence about the steps the State will be 25 required to take if the service reductions cannot take effect. Dreyfus Decl. at ¶ 6 26

(docket no. 124); Ex. 3 to 2d Work Decl. (docket no. 134). Consequently, the Court is presented not merely with a question of finance, but rather, availability of funding for other critical Medicaid and social service programs.<sup>48</sup> Plaintiffs respond to the State's concerns by arguing that the State can deal with the current fiscal crisis by (1) raising taxes; (2) closing institutions;<sup>49</sup> or (3) simply declining to balance the budget, in contravention of state law.<sup>50</sup> None of plaintiffs' proposals seriously addresses the potential harm that will result to other needy beneficiaries if the State is forced to make cuts to other social service programs.

Finally, as the Court noted in its denial of plaintiffs' motion for a temporary restraining order, DSHS has conducted a comprehensive review to determine how best to accomplish the fiscal goals mandated by the governor, and it has applied its expertise in weighing the competing interests of the various clients it serves. Thus, even if a few of the plaintiffs ultimately require institutionalization as a result of the

<sup>48</sup> The reductions to personal care services will save the State $19.2 million dollars over the remaining five months of the fiscal biennium. Dreyfus Decl. at ¶ 5 (docket no. 124). Thus, for each month the State is enjoined from implementing the reduction in personal care service hours, the State might have to find an additional $3.8 million dollars by cutting other social service programs. See id.

<sup>49</sup> The Supreme Court has expressly rejected any reading of the ADA that would force states to close institutions to fund community-based care. Olmstead, 527 U.S. at 604 ("The ADA is not reasonably read to impel States to phase out institutions, placing patients in need of close care at risk.").

<sup>50</sup> Plaintiffs contend that the Washington State Constitution permits the State to run a budget deficit. See WASH. CONST. art. 8, §§ 1(b), 8. But State law requires the governor to balance the budget if at any time during the fiscal biennium, the governor projects a cash deficit. See RCW 43.88.110(7) ("If at any time during the fiscal period the governor projects a cash deficit . . . the governor shall make across-the-board reductions in allotments . . . so as to prevent a cash deficit.") (emphasis added). To the extent plaintiffs actually contend that violating State law is an alternative to the budget reductions, the Court rejects that contention.

1 State's reduction in services, the Court cannot conclude that the threat to these 2 individuals outweighs the State's interest in preserving the carefully orchestrated 3 personal care services program that currently serves more than 45,000 individuals. For 4 the same reasons, the Court cannot conclude that the possible threat of 5 institutionalization for a few personal care service beneficiaries outweighs the State's 6 interest in balancing the competing needs of a host of different state-sponsored social 7 service programs that currently provide aid to a diverse group of medically and 8 financially disadvantaged state residents.

11 The Court concludes that the balance of the equities tips in favor of the State, 12 and as a consequence, the public interest would not be served by forcing DSHS to 13 target perhaps more vulnerable individuals or programs while the merits of plaintiffs' 14 claims in this matter are resolved.

15 CONCLUSION

16 17 For the foregoing reasons, the Court DENIES plaintiffs' motion for a
